"My art is about knowing the truth from a lie.
I paint about injustice. The more we are able to own our religious, spiritual, and survival information, and even language, the less we can be controlled. Throughout Native American history from 1900 to the present, the artists—sometimes thought of as troublemakers or radicals, whether their art has been modern or traditional—have always been willing to ride the wild horses.
They all deserve our respect.
I want to follow their path."
